To identify the association between the TNF- α gene polymorphism and the clinical stage of acute lymphoblastic leukemia(ALL), to investigate the correlation between the polymorphism and the response of treatment of ALL, and to explore whether the polymorphism is related to the improvement of immune function of ALL patients. The TNF- α gene polymorphisms, including rs1799964 A>G and rs1800630 C>T, of ALL patients were detected by polymerase chain reaction-ligase detection reaction (PCR-LDR). The results showed that there was no difference in the frequencies of the rs1799964 A>G and rs1800630 C>T between ALL patients and healthy controls ($P>0.05$). After the treatment of ALL, the allele and genotype frequencies of rs1799964 A>G and rs1800630 C>T in patients with ALL at stages of I-II were not significantly different compared with healthy controls, but the allele and genotype frequencies of rs1799964 A>G and rs1800630 C>T in patients at stages of III-IV were significantly different compared with healthy controls(PG in low-risk ALL patients at stages of I-II were different from those of high-risk
