The film is set in the lead-up to the Iraq War and follows the exploits of a former fighter pilot and now .Nigerian ex-footballers Peter Odemwingie and Michael Owen are hitting out at a Football Association investigation into alleged suspect betting on the Premier League by top players. Odemwingie has been fined £50,000 and Owen £5,000 after it was reported they were involved with the "purchase" of bets at the 2005 FIFA World Club Championship in Mexico. The pair play with their respective clubs FC Bunyodkor and Leicester City. Odemwingie told liverpoolfc.tv: "There is no way I'm going to speak on that. I'm the only one who has been spoken about and it's something very painful for me. "That's the third time I've had an interview and a second-hand investigation and nothing happens. It's not a surprise because they are protecting the integrity of the FA. "In 2005 I wasn't involved with anything. I was still at Rangers at that time but I was not that person who was involved with anything. "I you want to talk about anything. They should sort out this situation. I don't understand what is happening to me." Owen says the investigation has "runted my football and thas nothing to do with football and it has nothing to do with football and it has nothing to do with football or entertainment. It's got nothing to do with not probably be banned and I'd be the first to agree with that. "This is an issue about football and players being investigated for a crime
